SEPTEMBER

September 30, 2026

Welcome

Here at Saving Rivers and Lakes, we are delighted that you have an interest in following our work.

Which is why we are excited to announce a new initiative: the publishing of a monthly newsletter. You will be able to follow how we work and what projects we are currently engaged in.

Every month, we will publish a short update about what we have been working on this month, as well as a bit about the projects coming up.

The newsletter will make it easier for you to keep track of new developments in our projects. We hope you want to follow our journey!

What's next?

Exciting things are happening in our small organization. Our director, Nikolaj, has returned to Peru. He is now getting started on our latest project, Water and Life. With support from CISU (Civil Society in Development), we will make a series of portraits of indigenous people in Peru and their relationship with water and their territory.

Also, we are delighted to welcome two interns from the universities of Aarhus and Aalborg. Randi and Mette will, among other things, continue working on From Andes to Aarhus as a theme in high schools.

Thank you for your attention ♥

From Andes to Aarhus

From September 2 to September 16, you have had the opportunity to experience the exhibition From Andes to Aarhus at Dokk1 in Aarhus. The exhibition began as part of Aarhus Festuge but was extended for another week in order to give more people a chance to see it.

From Andes to Aarhus focused on how the Andes Mountains in Peru and daily life in Aarhus are much more closely connected than one might think. The exhibition also introduced the Danish audience to life next to the rivers of Peru and the vital importance of clean water for local communities, such as the Shipibo-Konibo people.

On Friday, September 4, we held the premiere of our film From Andes to Aarhus, a wonderful afternoon and evening featuring Peruvian food and a visit from the Peruvian ambassador in Denmark, Augusto Ernesto Salamanca Castro.

A big thank you to all of you who came to see our exhibition and attended the premiere!
